Unificationists in New Jersey have jumped into outreach with the beginning of a new outreach initiative in the region. Participants said they have long thought about how to effectively do outreach, but were not sure where to begin. Inspired by the recent outreach efforts in Los Angeles, participants began on campus at New Jersey Institute of Technology (NJIT).

Manoj Jacobs, Pastor of the Clifton Family Church in New Jersey, met with organizers and offered support. The Collegiate Association for the Research of Principles (CARP) president of NJIT, Ms. Satoe Ozawa, helped the team rent a conference room on campus to begin. On the day of their first outreach program, they still had not gotten confirmation that they would have a room, but that morning after a prayer at the church, they received word that they would have the room for the afternoon.

That first day, the outreach team invited three students to hear an Introduction to the Divine Principle, held in the conference room. The second day, Generation Peace Academy helped the team get over 15 new contacts. By the third day, three of the students had returned to learn more.

The team is inspired and hopeful that the outreach will continue to grow and allow more young Unificationists to take part in the activities.
