Greetings!

This is the last chance to sign your High School aged child up for this weekend's Relationship Workshop, taking place at New Hope Farms on Friday, February 17 through Sunday, February 19, 2012. Registration Closes tomorrow, Thursday, February 16th, so make sure you register your child today!

Content: This workshop will focus on giving students skills to empower them in their relationships with their family and friends and is intended only for serious students who want to dig deep into the Divine Principle to see how it can empower us in our relationships. While there will be some fun, epic, moments to remember during this weekend workshop, the primary focus is to help participants realize the power that the Divine Principle has to make their relationships meaningful and fulfilling. Therefore, the staff would like to stress that only students who are serious about digging deeper into their life of faith should attend this workshop. The workshop is limited to 25 participants, and we want to make sure that everyone who attends is mature enough to handle the content and activities that we will be doing throughout the weekend. The workshop is open to freshman, sophomores, juniors, and seniors, but again, we ask that they come with a desire to dig deep into their lives of faith, and be willing to be open and honest about their lives and relationships.

Registration & Fees: The workshop fee is $80 per person. The fee includes lodging, meals and some additional supplies. There is no discount for multiple participants from one family. To register for the workshop, please click the registration link below. To see more detailed information, including information on what each participant should bring, and information on transportation, please click on the "Get more information" link below.
