China has for decades, been creating a global network of ports and bases from the Panama Canal, throughout South Asia, Africa and beyond. For the most part, the world has either yawned, failed to notice or assisted them. To be fair, a few opinion leaders in policy and media have been trying to get the world's attention as China developed its global Belt and Road Initiative, and have been expanding their military capabilities at a rate that goes far beyond the needs of a country to defend itself. Democracy has been crushed in Hong Kong, and there are daily provocations into Taiwan's airspace.

Co-Sponsored by the Washington Times Foundation & the International Media Association for Peace of Universal Peace Federation
