Tensions are rising with China, North Korea, Russia and Iran, sometimes referred to as the axis of authoritarianism. The likelihood of conflict is also increasing. How is the chaotic rhetoric of this election cycle playing in the strategic planning rooms of Beijing, Pyongyang, Moscow and Teheran? All of these adversaries have their favorites in our presidential election, and they all have plans, individually and collectively, to undermine U.S. interests around the globe. Whether the Democrat or Republican wins, we may be in for a rough way ahead.

Join Washington Times geopolitical security expert Fred Fleitz, along with moderator Amb. Robert Joseph, Senior Scholar at the National Institute for Public Policy and Dr. Alexandre Mansourov, professor of security studies at Georgetown, as they examine the security challenges both parties face going into our national election.
