Dear WFWP-GWPN members, friends, and supporters,

In commemoration of National Liberation Day of Korea, WFWP will bring together women leaders in a GWPN Forum to examine how the Korean Peninsula, once a symbol of division, could become a beacon of peace and reconciliation. The end of colonial rule on August 15, 1945, marked a new beginning for Korea, but the subsequent division between North and South has kept the region in a state of tension for decades. Achieving peace would transform the Korean Peninsula and serve as a catalyst for global change, showing how nations can transition from conflict to cooperation.

Although the tiny peninsula of Korea may seem insignificant, it represents one of the most unique conflicts between communism and democracy spanning 70 years. Despite the challenges of this frozen conflict, the possible impact of change on the peninsula within the wider Indopacific is significant. The ripple effects in the wider global landscape would be enormous when the Korean Peninsula sees a shift toward peace.

The quest for peace on the Korean Peninsula has been a lifelong dream for the co-founders of WFWP, both of whom were forced to flee North Korea during the country's separation. Their vision extends beyond a personal desire to see their homeland reunited; they believe that a united Korea can be a global peace pioneer, sparking peace and unity worldwide. This webinar will reflect on Korea's journey from liberation to its potential as a peace pioneer, highlighting its broader implications for global peace and unity.

August 22, at 5 PM PT/ 6 PM MT/ 7 PM CT/ 8 PM ET
