

Greetings from Yoshi Mori, the new WFWP USA Logic of Love newsletter editor

Yoshi Mori
March 24, 2021

Greetings! I am the new Logic of Love Newsletter editor, Yoshi Mori. I am so glad I found WFWP. As chance would have it, I have three daughters! I am excited to be part of a group of women contributing to a more loving and peaceful world.

As a young girl I was first introduced to WFWP by my mother, who was a member, and took me with her to a Bridge of Peace event. As an adult, I attended yearly fundraisers to support the Schools of Africa.

After majoring in Nutrition and Dietetics from the University of New Haven in Connecticut, I worked for three years running the nutrition program for seniors for the town of Westport. After my maternity leave in 2016, I wanted a job that aligned with the school schedule and began teaching math and science at a small private school until 2019. Currently, I supervise a homeschooling program for my kids and my friends' three kids. I shared my reflections on what I was learning along with my students in the February 15th issue of the WFWP newsletter.

I bring with me my life experience as a wife, mother, daughter and sister. I bring with me my love for writing and desire to make a positive difference in the world. I am privileged to come in contact with the inspiring and positive articles that honor and support the role of women as peacemakers.

Relearning history: Reflections on Black history by a homeschooling mother

February 15, 2021 · Yoshi Mori

Due to the pandemic, I decided to begin homeschooling my three children last year, and soon our small learning pod grew to include my friend's three kids. After teaching math and science at a private school for three years, I found myself teaching history for the first time. Thanks to an in-depth curriculum provided by Core Knowledge, the same one used in the private school where I had worked,

I was learning for the first time about the contributions of African Americans that were not as well known and never included in my childhood history books.

For example, we recently studied about the construction of Washington, DC. I was learning right along with my students that it was slaves and freed black men who built the White House. I learned about Benjamin Banneker, the surveyor of the then new capital. Not only was he honored for his contributions in that historical moment, but he was also a self-taught astronomer, scientist and writer. Mr. Banneker was born a freeman and hoped to see an end to slavery. He corresponded with Thomas Jefferson over this issue that “all men were created equal”.

Next came the war of 1812, where we learned about Charles Ball, a slave, who declared himself free and fought on the American side, even though Great Britain promised freedom to any slaves that fought on the British side. Charles Ball ended up being enslaved again years after the war.

We have the greatest of the greats: Martin Luther King Jr., Harriet Tubman, George Washington Carver, Frederick Douglass and many more. In every moment of American history, African Americans have excelled, invested, and served. These stories must be taught throughout the whole school year. Benjamin Banneker and Charles Bell are examples that black history is part of every event in American history.

Homeschooling has given me a chance to relearn history. However, how does knowing some facts about great men and women of color who served our country compensate for 400 years of injustice and brutal treatment that still bear scars and lingering institutional bias? There are still remnants of racism in people's hearts, in society, and in our culture. There are many ways to contribute to cultural change to heal and end inequality. One way is that we must not forget to teach history and teach it inclusive of all who built our nation.

Core Knowledge student readers and teacher guides (with worksheets and links to online videos and resources to go with each lesson) are available free online at www.coreknowledge.org. The original Core Knowledge History and Geography textbooks can also be purchased (used) online for $10 to $20.

Information for this article was taken from the 4th grade Core Knowledge History and Geography textbook. Copyright 2002 by Pearson Education Inc.

And from the following websites provided in the teacher guides:

<https://www.coreknowledge.org/wp-content/uploads/2017/09/CKHG-Online-Resources-Early-Pr esidents-Social-Reformers.pdf>

<https://www.pbs.org/video/the-war-of-1812-blacks-in-the-war/>

<https://www.nps.gov/articles/american-liberty-and-slavery-in-the-chesapeake.htm>

PREVIOUS

President's Corner: What is True Love?

NEXT

WFWP USA celebrates Black History Month 2021 with its theme "The Black Family: Representation, Identity and Diversity"

481 8th Ave. Suite 1228, New York, NY 10001 - 1 (212) 302-8837 - info@wfwp.us

Copyright © 2019, Women's Federation for World Peace USA - All Rights Reserved

Member Only
Webinar Access

Chairwomen
Resources

Back to Homepage

Privacy Policy