Integral Society:

Limiting The Role of Central Banks and Other Social Institutions

Tuesday, June 20, 2 – 3 PM (EST)

Dear,

An integral society is a healthy society when all the social institutions, like the organs of the human body, work together to serve individuals and the common good. In the human body, the heart cannot perform the function of the brain. Likewise, a government cannot perform the role of a cultural institution like the family. Contemporary society contains many advanced social institutions that have evolved for important reasons but have been hijacked for selfish or ideological reasons and become like cancers feeding on individuals rather than serving them. Today, many social institutions, including governments, banks, and universities, exploit the citizens they are meant to serve. This presentation will look at the philosophical, ideological, and historical underpinnings of these institutions, especially banks. Have they strayed from their original role of serving society, to become concentrations of wealth and power for a few people?

Gordon L. Anderson. Ph.D

Author – Integral Society: Social Institutions and Individual Sovereignty

President, Paragon House Publishers

Gordon has a Ph.D. in Philosophy of Religion, with a minor in peace studies, from Claremont Graduate University. As the Secretary General of Professors World Peace Academy, he organized comprehensive academic conferences on world social systems with the late Professor Morton A. Kaplan at the University of Chicago. His integral philosophy developed as the editor of a series of books by integral scholars at Paragon House and as an adjunct professor at the California Institute of Integral Studies.

Sunhyun A. Miller, B.A.

Software Engineer and Founder/President of Unify Software Consulting.

He received his Bachelor's degree in computer science from Thomas Edison State University, and currently works full-time as a software engineer and consultant at his own firm, Unify Software Consulting. While his formal training is in computer science and software engineering, he has also pursued a personal passion for economics, politics, philosophy, and religion. During the early years of his career, he worked as a software engineer in the back office for a major national bank, where he developed a great interest in the economics of money and banking. Sunhyun is also committed to public service, volunteering as assistant pastor at his local church.
