Relationships

We all want meaningful relationships. CARP champions having healthy relationships within families, communities, at school, and even between nations. We talk about the give and receive principle which says that to have successful relationships we have to give love and also receive the love others give.

That's what a relationship is: it's consistency, following up with people, and inspiring them to take action. This month, our chapters held their weekly meetings, deepening their relationships with their members and giving them principles to live by!

Alicia, a sophomore at Salt Lake Community College, invites other students to her lunch table to talk about CARP's Principles (pictured above), showing that you don't need a room to talk about what matters and to build relationships! Every conversation is an opportunity to impact someone for the better.

Registered chapters have a special opportunity to develop their leadership in a campus setting and get connected to a whole sphere of impact and support.

CARP Grand Rapids held a Campus Talk Event (pictured above) on March 28th with guest speaker, Dr. Frank Kaufmann. CARP Grand Rapids has been building relationships with many on campus and were able to share an important conversation about healing America with two faculty members and 17 students.

Mia Taguchi, a first year student at CARP Las Vegas, said, "It's become evident to me that if I truly want to make a difference in the world, it starts with not just the individual, but the impact an individual has on the family. The impact our actions have encompasses a whole circle of people."

We grow through relationships. In CARP, we encourage students to reach out and build relationships instead of isolating ourselves with our phones. CARP is changing the culture of college campuses through healthy relationships.
