

Nature Has Emotion - proof from religion & science

Wong Jian Rong

January 19, 2011

"Eventually, the way of religion and the way of science should be integrated and their problems resolved in one united undertaking; the two aspects of truth, internal and external, should develop in full consonance." (Exposition of Divine Principle, Introduction)

RELIGION

The earth feels happy in the place where one of the faithful cultivates wheat, grass and fruit, where he waters ground that is dry, or dries out ground that is too wet. (Zoroastrianism)

The destruction of vegetable growth is an offense requiring expiation. (Buddhism)

There are languages in the animal world. If you sing to your plants, they will grow better and their flowers will generate more fragrance. Even flowers appreciate music and art. (Unificationism)

SCIENCE

(Mineral)

Message From Water

Masaru Emoto explains his fantastic experiments on water crystals: He and his team tested samples of water from different sources, or labeled them with statements like "I love you", "I hate you"; he also exposed some other samples to different kind of music. He took then photos of the frozen water samples. The resulting message from water is quite amazing, showing water's ability to respond to external energies, even feelings...

(Plant)

Plants Have Souls

Scientific research indicates that plants communicate with insects, animals, human beings and other plants in order to keep themselves alive and safe. Plants respond not only to insects and animals but to human emotion and intention. Plants can distinguish between people who are feel kindly towards them and people who don't.

(Animal)

Animals Have Emotion

Researchers of the University of Texas claim that animals can experience emotions such as love, fear, jealousy or grief. Even more: dogs, for example, can observe how human emotions are expressed in behavior and physiological changes, and apply the example in expressing their own feelings.

Human beings, the center of the creation, want love. Animals also want love; so do plants. Animals want human love. Plants want love from animals. Humans, as the masters of creation, should love animals; those animals should love plants and other creatures. True love thus links everything in a hierarchical order, with God on the top, then human beings, then animals, then plants and finally minerals.
(Unificationism)

<http://newtruthseeker.blogspot.com/2011/01/nature-have-soul.html>