

FFWPU Europe & Middle East: Demian Dunkley on When Conscience Dies, Global War on God

Knut Holdhus
February 8, 2026

Demian Dunkley delivering his speech on Feb. 2, 2026 in Washington D.C.

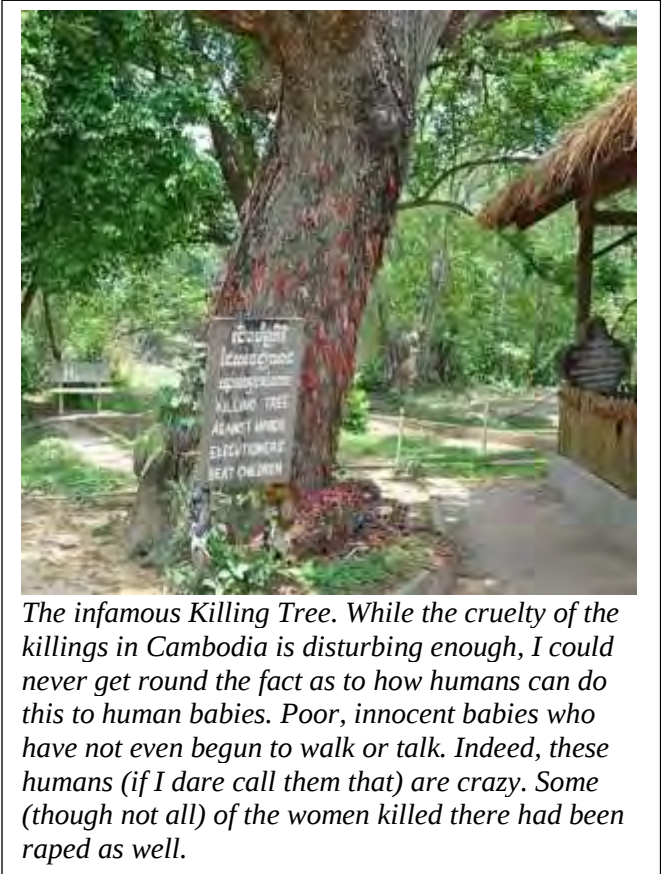

Demian Dunkley delivering his speech on 2nd Feb. 2026 in Washington D. C.

South Korea: Echoes of evil in the war on the conscience of humanity as peace makers are treated as criminals

When Conscience Dies

A speech by Demian Dunkley, the President of the Family Federation for World Peace and Unification in North America, delivered at a Special Dinner on 2nd February during the The International Religious Freedom (IRF) Summit 2026 in Washington DC.

See also Gingrich Warns Against State Control of Faith

The infamous Killing Tree. While the cruelty of the killings in Cambodia is disturbing enough, I could never get round the fact as to how humans can do this to human babies. Poor, innocent babies who have not even begun to walk or talk. Indeed, these humans (if I dare call them that) are crazy. Some (though not all) of the women killed there had been raped as well.

I've been to the killing fields. In Cambodia. Where you can still hear the echoes of the cries of those who fell at the hands of the Khmer Rouge. The religious. The intellectuals. The mind of the nation destroyed. Millions butchered.

Why? Because one leader decided they did not believe the right way.

In the middle of the killing fields stands a special tree. A tree where unimaginable things were done to babies in front of their mothers, before both mothers and children were thrown onto a heaping mound inside a ditch.

All while loud music blasted from speakers in the treetops so neighboring villages would not hear the howling cries of human slaughter.

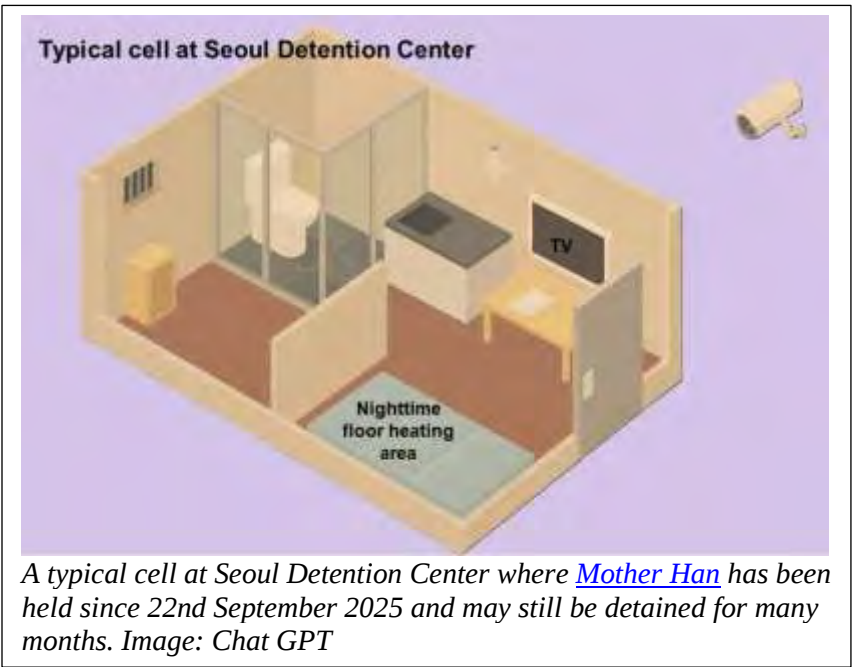

There are signboards with depictions of the buildings that once stood there. The image that disturbed me the most was a single-story guard house on wooden stilts, where soldiers would rest while others took their turn killing.

At the base of the steps was a hammock. I tried to imagine what kind of human being could lie back in a hammock to rest, while his fellow countrymen were being mutilated just a stone's throw away.

No matter what form it takes, we must acknowledge that evil exists. We must acknowledge that there is a central driving spirit with intent to bring ruin to humanity, especially by taking the freedoms of those who work for peace.

It was Dr. Hak Ja Han who sent me there, to Cambodia, so that I could learn and see with my own eyes. She had already visited herself, to pray for the liberation of those tormented souls, just as she has done in Africa to pray for the victims of the slave trade, and in Europe to pray over the lives lost at the hands of the Nazis.

These are merely drops in the ocean of a lifetime's work. Dr. Hak Ja Han, loved by millions around the world as Holy Mother Han, the Mother of Peace, has lived eight decades of her life dreaming of peace, living for peace, and sacrificing for the sake of humanity without regard for personal benefit.

And now, she sits in a cement box the size of a Mini Cooper.

Why? Because someone decided she doesn't believe the right way.

Though they hold her passport, she was considered a flight risk.

So now an 83-year-old great-grandmother, a world religious figure, barely able to see, barely able to walk, having already fallen down several times, has resorted to crawling on her hands and knees in near total isolation.

And yet she is asking about you. And how you are doing. Still, she is praying. Still, she is dreaming of a world of peace.

On 18th July last year, 1000 agents and police officers in riot gear descended upon her sanctuary and her home in Gapyeong, South Korea.

Within weeks of opening an international temple of peace and prayer for all humankind, where even members of our own faith had not yet entered, hundreds of police boots trampled ignorantly across this threshold of heaven.

Prosecutors were seen taking great pleasure as they entered her bedroom, ripping out drawers and throwing all of her belongings onto the floor. This wasn't a search. It was humiliation.

Again we ask, how do people become this numb?

Presumption of guilt without evidence. Militarized raids. Failure to respect age and health concerns. Orchestrated exposure to mass media from prosecutors' offices. Failure to protect her from media mobs and chaotic crowds. Inadequate medical support. Psychological deprivation through isolation. Erasure of her humanitarian, interfaith, and peace-building record. The list goes on and on.

And then, after months in detention, when it appeared the prosecutors could find no evidence, the head of state personally entered the arena and began to speak openly of dissolving our church by replicating the proceedings now unfolding in Japan.

I tell you plainly. We are an inconvenient faith. Because, like all of you here, our passion for goodness cannot be controlled.

And this is happening to Christian organizations across South Korea today. How does a democratic nation become like this?

Each of us is here with a story of oppression, suppression, or abuse. But the root of all of this is evil. And it has been rightly described as a global war on God.

I would like to leave you with a simple concept, a fundamental framework through which all of this can be understood. In the pamphlet, it says:

"The freedom to believe and worship, is one of the most fundamental human rights."

This is true. And yet I would go further. It is not simply one of the most fundamental human rights, it is the central, most essential human right given to us by God, our Creator.

So what is the proper relationship between church and state? The religious sphere acts as the conscience of a nation. The government serves as the body.

We all know the way an individual becomes evil is by stepping on one's conscience. And the way a state becomes evil is by stepping on the religious sphere which represents the conscience of the nation.

Anytime persons trample on their conscience, or a leader tramples on the conscience of a nation, the ability to discern goodness becomes numb, and the window to evil is opened wide.

However, we cannot push back against evil forces simply by demanding rights from our governments. We must strike at the root of evil by standing in our dignified roles as God's sons and daughters, knowing that our rights come from our Creator.

Because there is no democracy without freedom. And there is no freedom without God.

See also In Tiny Solitary Cell: Irreversible Harm Caused

See also Religious Freedom Threat: China-Led Alliance

See also Gingrich Warns Against State Control of Faith

See also Unificationism, Industry, and Cold War Survival

See also Current Korean Situation: Context and Key Issues

See also Court: Prosecutors' Overreach in Politicized Case

See also S. Korea's Troubling Pattern of Selective Probes

See also Unificationism Emerging as a World Religion

See also Alarm Over State Interference in Religion

Related to when conscience dies: Mother Han's December Trial: Long Detention Ahead

Also related to when conscience dies: A 10-Minute Visit to Mother Han in Detention

Also related to when conscience dies: Denying Allegations: Hak Ja Han \(82\) in Inquiry

Also related to when conscience dies: SKorean Court's Sharp Criticism of Prosecutors

And also related to when conscience dies: Detention: Harsh Cell Conditions Spark Outcry

More, related to when conscience dies: Ugly: Arrest Warrant Sought for Hak Ja Han \(82\)

And more, related to when conscience dies: Critics Warn of "Authoritarian Drift" in SKorea

Even more, related to when conscience dies: Court Decision to Prolong Detention Condemned

Still more, related to when conscience dies: Co-Founder, 82, Questioned 9 Hours by Prosecutors

Also related to when conscience dies: Democratic Party's Assault on Family Federation

And even more, related to when conscience dies: Mother Han \(82\) in Poor Health in Damp, Cold Cell

And still more, related to when conscience dies: Korean Crisis: "True Democracy Must Serve Heaven"

And yet more, related to when conscience dies: Faith Leaders Protest State Assault on Religion

Also related to when conscience dies: News Release Blasts Indictment of Hak Ja Han, 82

More, related to when conscience dies: 70 Years On: Detention History Repeats Itself

And more, related to when conscience dies: Trump Raises Alarm Over Church Raids in Korea

Even more, related to when conscience dies: Mike Pompeo Calls Probe of Co-Founder "Lawfare"

Still more, related to when conscience dies: Korean Faith Crackdown: USA Urged to Confront It

Yet more, related to when conscience dies: Korean Bribery Scandal: Media Clears Federation

And also related to when conscience dies: Raids Blur Line Between Justice and Politics

More, related to when conscience dies: Heavy-Handed Raid on Sacred Sites Condemned the author, any fair evaluation of Unificationism must take into account what it did during this period of national vulnerability – particularly its involvement in building the foundations of South Korea's self-reliant defense capability.

South Korea in the Shadow of War

End of the Korean War in 1953: UN delegate Lieut. Gen. William K. Harrison, Jr. (seated left), and Korean People's Army and Chinese People's Volunteers delegate Gen. Nam Il (seated right) signing the Korean War armistice agreement at Panmunjom, Korea, 27th July 1953. Photo: U.S. Department of Defense (F. Kazukaitis. U.S. Navy) / Wikimedia Commons. Public domain image

To understand the article's argument, it is essential to understand the historical context. The Korean War (1950–1953) ended not with a peace treaty but with an armistice. Technically, North and South Korea remain at war to this day. During the decades that followed, the possibility of renewed conflict was not theoretical; it was an ever-present reality. North Korea maintained a large standing army, openly threatened invasion, and engaged in provocations ranging from border clashes to assassination attempts.

In the 1960s and 1970s, South Korea was still economically underdeveloped and militarily dependent on the United States and other allies. Most of its weapons, ammunition, and critical components were imported. This dependency created a dangerous vulnerability: in a crisis, foreign supply lines could be delayed, restricted, or cut off altogether. As a result, South Korea's leadership increasingly emphasized self-reliant national defense – the ability to produce essential military equipment domestically.

It is within this environment, the article argues, that the activities of Unificationism must be assessed.

Heavy Industry

Unificationism can trace its roots back to the time before the Korean War, but first became a registered organization in 1954, after the war had ended. Reverend Sun Myung Moon (문선명) and a handful of followers then founded the Holy Spirit Association for the Unification of World Christianity, that became known as the Unification Church.

What distinguishes Moon from many other religious figures, according to the article, is that he did not limit his activities to spiritual or charitable work. Instead, during a period of acute national danger, he directed initiatives into one of the most technically demanding and politically sensitive fields imaginable: precision machinery and the defense industry.

Sun Myung Moon in the 1950s. Photo: FFWPU

His industrial venture began modestly. Tongil Industries (통일산업), the predecessor to Tongil Heavy Industries (통일중공업), reportedly started with little more than a secondhand lathe imported from Japan and a makeshift workshop in a repurposed building. Over time, however, this small operation evolved into a major industrial enterprise. By 1976, Tongil Heavy Industries had been officially designated a defense contractor by the South Korean government.

The company went on to manufacture and localize key components of South Korea's weapons systems. At a time when South Korea lacked both the technology and skilled workforce to produce such equipment independently, this contribution was strategically significant.

Beyond “Collusion”: An Argument for Historical Reinterpretation

Part of Sun Myung Moon's industrial projects: Korea Titanium Co. Here, in 1972. Photo: FFWPU

Critics of the movement that Sun Myung Moon founded often frame his industrial activities as evidence of improper closeness between religion and state power. The Segye Ilbo column challenges this interpretation.

Rather than seeing the involvement in defense manufacturing as “collusion”, the author frames it as a response to historical necessity.

From this perspective, Tongil Heavy Industries was not merely a factory producing parts for weapons. It functioned as a training ground for engineers, machinists, and technicians, many of whom later dispersed throughout South Korea's broader industrial sector. The skills, production methods, and organizational know-how developed there contributed to the overall advancement of the country's machinery and manufacturing capabilities.

Submit

Although Tongil Heavy Industries eventually declined – due to labor disputes, political pressure, and the economic shock of the late-1990s IMF crisis – its technological legacy did not disappear.

In his article, Jeong points out,

“Nevertheless, its technological legacy and human capital live on today through the SNT Group, one of Korea’s leading precision machinery and defense companies, which continues to shoulder a key part of the nation’s self-reliant defense.”

While SNT is no longer affiliated with the movement of Sun Myung Moon (문선명) and Hak Ja Han (한학자) – also called Father Moon and Mother Han – the author argues that SNTs capabilities remain rooted in the earlier push for defense self-reliance.

Faith, Fear, and National Survival

Wanted to celebrate his 60th birthday in 1972 in Seoul: Kim Il-sung. Here, official portrait from 1966. Photo: GreatLeader1945 / Wikimedia Commons. License: CC ASA 4.0 Int. Cropped

The article also emphasizes that the sense of national responsibility found within Unificationism extended beyond industry into its religious life. In the early 1970s, North Korean leader Kim Il-sung (김일성) publicly intensified threats of invasion, reportedly declaring that he would celebrate his 60th birthday – in 1972 – in Seoul. Fear of war gripped South Korean society.

Within what was then called the Unification Church, members reportedly responded with intense collective prayer and fasting. One striking anecdote describes overnight prayer vigils aimed at preventing the Imjin River from freezing – a symbolic and strategic concern, as a frozen river could facilitate the movement of North Korean tanks. While modern readers may question the literal efficacy of such prayers, the author urges readers to see them as expressions of a deeper sense of responsibility: the belief that the survival of the nation and the survival of the faith community were inseparable.

Interestingly, the article notes that official records from the Korea Meteorological Administration show that the Han River did not freeze in 1972. Whether coincidence or not, the episode is presented as a reminder of the psychological and emotional climate of the time.

A Call for Historical Balance

The column concludes with a broader reflection on how societies judge religious organizations in moments of crisis. The principle of separation between church and state, the author acknowledges, is essential. However, he argues that this principle should not be used to erase or ignore historical contributions that have already been absorbed into the national system.

From the author’s standpoint, the Unification Church did not retreat into isolation when South Korea faced potential collapse. Instead, it assumed risks – economic, political, and reputational – in pursuit of what it saw as national survival. Whether one views the religious movement favorably or critically, the article contends that this record deserves sober consideration.

Ultimately, the piece is less a defense of the present activities of Unificationism than a plea for historical nuance. Before invoking terms like “antisocial group” or “dissolution”, the author argues, Korean society should confront the full complexity of the past. How a society treats a contested religion in times of controversy, he concludes, is a measure of that society’s maturity – and of its willingness to judge history with both clarity and restraint.

See also When Conscience Dies: Global War on God

See also Gingrich Warns Against State Control of Faith

Text: Knut Holdhus, editor

Featured image above: When faith met industry during a time of war anxiety during the 1960s and 1970s. Illustration: ChatGPT, 7th February 2026, edited

Related to Unificationism and industry: SKorea’s Polarization Shapes Views of Mother Han

Also related to Unificationism and industry: Current Korean Situation: Context and Key Issues

Also related to Unificationism and industry: Large Daily on Family Federation and Politics

And also related to Unificationism and industry: At Issue: Religions Taking Reality Seriously

And also related to Unificationism and industry: Unificationism Emerging as a World Religion

And also related to Unificationism and industry: Worsening Health Becomes Major Media Issue

Also related to Unificationism and industry: Essence of God

More, related to Unificationism and industry: God and Human Beings

Also related to Unificationism and industry: The Kingdom of Heaven

And also related to Unificationism and industry: True Love

More, related to Unificationism and industry: The Value of the Family

And more, related to Unificationism and industry: God’s ideal

Still more, related to Unificationism and industry: God's Sorrow

Yet more, related to Unificationism and industry: Suffering of God

And yet more, related to Unificationism and industry: Family values

Also related to Unificationism and industry: Meaningful Marriage

More, related to Unificationism and industry: Living for Others

More, related to Unificationism and industry: Family as School of Love

More, related to Unificationism and industry: Parents and Children

More, related to Unificationism and industry: Teachings Make Great Strides in New Version

And more, related to Unificationism and industry: In a Nutshell

Yet more, related to Unificationism and industry: Brief about the Teachings

Still more, related to Unificationism and industry: Relationships

Even more, related to Unificationism and industry: Gender-Balanced Understanding of God and Christ

And yet more, related to Unificationism and industry: God as Our Heavenly Parent \(Father and Mother\)

And still more, related to Unificationism and industry: History of God: From Yahweh to Father to Parent

And even more, related to Unificationism and industry: Religious Truth as Progressive Revelation

Also related to Unificationism and industry: Essential Motherly Part of Messianic Mission

Also related to Unificationism and industry: The 3 Blessings and the Process to Fulfil Them

Also related to Unificationism and industry: Unification Principles