

I felt the hearts of Claudette and Tsukara Kambara toward their mentally ill son who murdered them

Mary Anglin
January 2, 2021

Tsukasa and Claudette Kambara

I wanted to share my experience during my prayer hour for the Kambara Family, during which I felt very connected to them.

First, I felt the hearts of Claudette and Tsukara. There was no residual pain or anger at the manner of their deaths. But they shared a deep feeling of sadness and worry for their son. The heart of parents was gut-wrenching pain for his situation and a deep longing for healing to come to him. They don't want 'punishment' for him, but healing.

Secondly, that their passing jointly as a couple (faithful Blessed Couple and a Cheonbo Victory Couple) can be offered for the healing of blessed families' difficult situations. Also as a larger offering allowing evil to be vanquished - quickly. And for goodness to take a strong forefront position. I felt especially that even though America was an adopted nation for both of them, their willingness and desire to heal the nation so that it may still fulfill its position as Elder Brother.

As my prayer hour came to a close, I felt peace. Some may doubt this report, but I do feel that as brothers and sisters under True Parents, we can sincerely connect with one another even across miles and realms.