Human trafficking is the fastest-growing organized crime in the United States, making almost $32 billion a year for traffickers while destroying the lives of tens of thousands of innocent children and families.

According to the Federal Human Trafficking Report, more than 50% of criminal human trafficking cases in the U.S. involved only children. These children are often still living at home with their parents, who are unaware of the situation. How is this possible? Most of these young people are recruited through social media apps and websites. Traffickers and pedophiles also use social media platforms to distribute underground child sexual abuse material, one of the most lucrative markets for sex traffickers.

Join the International Media Association for Peace (IMAP) for an enlightening discussion of these issues by passionate leaders in the fight to protect our youth. Dawn Hawkins, CEO of the National Center on Exploitation (NCOSE), will talk about the connection between all forms of sexual exploitation, including sex trafficking, prostitution, pornography, and child sexual abuse and what can be done to end it, Andrew Love of High Noon International will talk about his experience supporting young people in their struggle to rid themselves of porn addiction, and Patrick Erlandson, founder and director of Father-con, will clarify how father presence and responsible engagement can greatly reduce the vulnerability of youth to exploitation and trafficking.

Don't miss this exciting opportunity to join the conversation, learn from the experts and see what you can do to support our youth.
