Reflections:

The following are reflections from three second-gen members who attended the meeting with Mrs. Yong on the east coast. Please refer to it.

I've heard for some time that Mrs. Yong was giving education on raising children and reaching out to the second-gen and so I was curious about what she would say to our community. Her wit and guidance went way above my expectations. Her wisdom comes from a hands-on experience like counseling at workshops and involvement with matching her children.

What I didn't know was that she had experience witnessing as well and a lot to say about the home church. Now my wife is much more inspired to witness our neighbors than before!

If you want to feel hope in bringing back the second and third gen, don't miss Mrs. Yong.

I'm so grateful that Mrs. Yong could come to Belvedere. I heard from my wife that she has a lot to share when it comes to raising children and guiding them to the blessing. As I was listening to her I could understand the intentionality and sacrifice that it took for her to raise all of her children and guide them to the blessing practically all by herself. In a way, she reminded me of True Mother. For most of her married life, I think she has been in the background primarily raising the kids while Dr. Yong lived the life of a missionary and church leader. Through understanding Mrs. Yong's heart I felt I could get insights into True Mother's heart.

Finally, I think it's important to go in with some questions in mind. If you have a question you can find an answer. I definitely got a clear answer from her that felt as if it came from God.

Here is my reflection:

When Mrs. Yong came to New York, I was deeply moved on both occasions. I was particularly impressed by her humility and wisdom from substantial experience in both raising her Blessed family and witnessing.

For me, Mrs. Yong was not simply answering questions, nor was she coming already prepared to share, but she took time to digest questions and concerns and really consider what God wished to share through her. I sincerely appreciated that.

Also, every morning we hear Dr. Yong on Morning Devotion, and naturally his side of the story and perspective of their life, family, and also the providence. So two things surprised me from Mrs. Yong. One is that she really is united with her husband. There was an incredible congruency to both their providential and practical outlook. It was very reassuring. She placed much emphasis on witnessing, the standard for raising Blessed children, and the importance of personal touch.

And secondly, she came like a breath of new wind! We have heard the stories of their family and experience through Dr. Yong but this time it came from a Mother's perspective. I could see and feel the incredible weight she carries, the challenges she has faced, and how much sacrifice she has made as she stood together with Dr. Yong all these years; this touched me to my core.

There was much wisdom and insight that I could receive from receiving her here in NY and I highly encourage others to take the time to do the same.

Please tell the news to your community members.

Thank you.
