

Outreach itself can never be something fancy

Naoko Hiraki

April 3, 2015

Unificationists in Los Angeles shared the Divine Principle with 26 people.

Mrs. Naoko Hiraki, Kodan leader in Los Angeles, shared with the outreach team that campus outreach is not gathering 20 or 30 questionnaires, but focusing on one person at a time and bring him or her to Divine Principle study. This approach of totally focusing on a person, seeking to give and connect, is working. Gradually, the Los Angeles community is seeing more students who continue to study the Divine Principle

“When we have an outreach initiative, people want to see fancy results and exciting pictures,” explained Mrs. Hiraki. “But I believe that outreach itself can never be something fancy. When you truly try to restore a person to life by God’s words, you might go through pain. By going through and overcoming all the pain and struggles, we finally can start bringing guests. They come with the clear purpose of reading and studying the Divine Principle with us. They come in seeking the truth. After we read together, discuss and make an emotional connection with them, then they return again and become regular Divine Principle studying contacts. This is the way we can revive people with the Divine Principle.”

Join an outreach team or plan ahead to participate in your own community. Every community is hosting at least one day of outreach to enable you to meet God as you befriend those who seek love, truth and hope!