

To Get Rid Of People, First, Get Rid Of God

Satan's way, from the beginning, has been to get rid of people. First, get rid of God. Then, eliminate anyone who makes you feel unhappy. So Cain kills his irritating little brother, having heard Satan's voice saying this will make him happy and free. It didn't work out that way for Cain, and it's been so ever since.

This is why Communism started out with getting rid of God, it's an embodiment of Satan's personality, aka fallen nature. Then it needed to get rid of the bourgeoisie. Then counter-revolutionaries, then saboteurs, on and on in a never-ending stream of enemies. As soon as one was 'liquidated', another had to be found. Because the technique of achieving happiness by eliminating people is never satisfied. It never reaches the peace that people seek. Eliminating people does not bring peace, prosperity or happiness.

The reality is that our enemy is not outside of us, it is within us. Inside of me, I deal with this fallen nature every day. I wish my car had a missile launcher that could vaporize the slow driver in front of me. These other people driving are just in my way. What are all these people doing on my road? On my beach? Why don't they all just go away. I can't stand this politician, I wish someone would just shoot him, or lock him up in jail. These thoughts and desires come to me regularly.

And I don't think I'm alone in this. Ever live with someone you love, and wish they would just go away sometimes? Find yourself dreaming of them just disappearing, and how happy you'd be?

If I have that in me, then the world would be in trouble if I had absolute power.

For this reason I'm always leery when people, organizations, movements or governments rail against enemies and celebrate getting rid of them, insulting them, trying to jail them or run them out of town, ruin them, deport them, kill them, etc. Because this will never bring anyone peace, and they will never run out of people they want to get rid of. This is why some have multiple marriages and divorces.

It's very deep rooted, and we all have to deal with it. One advantage of having your enemies outside of you is that you never have to look at the confused, inner swamp of contradictions sloshing around inside you, or admit that you may be confused or just wrong. Well, God forbid that anyone should see my weaknesses, so let's just talk about this other guy's faults. I'm sure you and I can agree that he's the real problem. Or she. I'm open minded, you see. Anyone else can be the problem.
