The event consisted of a conversation with 3 young women as speakers, and a moderator, Anais Vega, a Biologist. They shared how they assess their professional development, focusing on those aspects that have helped them to progress and develop towards becoming a better professional, ensuring that the service they deliver to society is efficient and of good quality.

Sunhwa Sara Marchan, a nurse at Public Hospital, Gracia Fehlberg, a leader in billing processes at IBM, and Diana Sanchez de Abreu, an engineer of telecommunication at Spotify, made beautiful presentations about how they engaged in their areas of study, and then later into their different jobs.

They relayed their challenges, difficulties and successes. They also shared a deep desire to offer the best service they can to the people they work with or to the project they are supposed to develop.

Ethics is a high priority to them and they expressed that it is important to dream big and be passionate about their choices.
