Rev. John Joseph Hayab speaking at the event

On February 24, 2026, the Global Peace Foundation (GPF) Nigeria, in collaboration with the community leadership of Hayin Banki, Kaduna State, convened Christian and Muslim leaders and residents in Hayin Banki for an interfaith fast-breaking and community dialogue. Held at the Hayin Banki Palace under the theme "Unity in Diversity: Strengthening Peace Through Shared Faith," the program brought together 127 participants, including 20 community leaders, 15 faith leaders, 85 community members, and seven GPF Nigeria staff.

The initiative was designed to reinforce social cohesion in a community shaped by religious diversity. Rather than limiting engagement to formal dialogue, the program centered on a shared Ramadan fast-breaking (iftar), creating space for direct interaction and relationship-building. The structure included opening remarks, goodwill messages from faith leaders, the breaking of the fast, and a closing charge focused on collective responsibility.

GPF Nigeria positioned local faith leaders as primary advocates for peace. Reverend Bulus Danyia, Pastor Seth Danjuma Wambai, and the Chief Imam of Hayin Banki shared a common platform, demonstrating visible collaboration across religious lines. Their participation signaled to congregants that peaceful coexistence is essential to community stability.

Reverend John Joseph Hayab, Country Director of GPF Nigeria, stated that the event reflected the foundation's

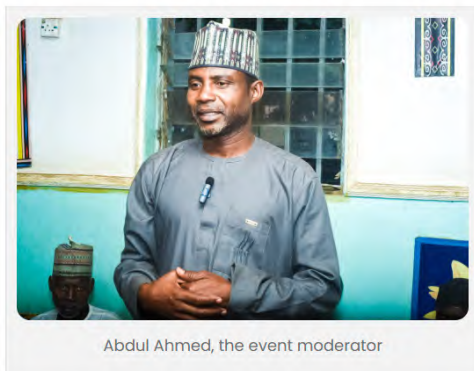

“One Family under God” framework, which emphasizes shared moral responsibility across faith traditions. He stressed that when religious leaders act together, they reduce the risk of misinformation, suspicion, and escalation during times of tension.

The program intentionally emphasized ownership. While GPF Nigeria facilitated and provided staffing support, mobilization was led by the Hayin Banki Peace and Reconciliation Committee and local community leadership. This approach strengthened local accountability and ensured that the initiative responded to the community's realities.

Outcomes were evident at both relational and structural levels. Participants reported increased understanding of one another's religious practices. Christian attendees gained firsthand exposure to Islamic fasting traditions, while Muslim participants experienced solidarity from Christian neighbors during a sacred observance. This exchange addressed common misconceptions and reduced social distance.

Faith leaders committed to continued collaboration beyond the event. A shared values-based framework was introduced to guide joint responses to local challenges, shifting engagement from sectarian advocacy to collective problem solving. Participants also agreed to maintain informal communication channels to “look out for each other,” strengthening early response mechanisms to potential conflict triggers.

Community Chief Alhaji Mahmuda Shehu Galadima publicly acknowledged the importance of the gathering, urging residents to extend the spirit of unity into their homes and businesses. His endorsement reinforced the legitimacy of the interfaith collaboration and strengthened public trust in the process.

Rev. Bulus Danyia added, “The Global Peace Foundation Nigeria deserves great commendation for organizing this evening program, which successfully fostered togetherness among people of different faiths. Witnessing Christians and Muslims sharing a meal has profoundly strengthened our commitment to peaceful coexistence in Hayin Banki.”

Pastor Seth Danjuma Wambai emphasized the practical implications of the gathering: “This event was not just a meal; it was a powerful reminder of our duty to look out for each other as neighbors. I believe this shared experience has created a solid foundation for sustainable peace and cooperation in our community.”

The impact of the event extends beyond a single evening. By integrating interfaith leadership into a culturally significant religious practice, the program established a replicable model for grassroots conflict prevention. The visible unity of faith leaders provides a counter-narrative to extremist messaging and reduces the likelihood that local disputes escalate along religious lines.

GPF Nigeria’s follow-through plan includes sustained engagement with faith leaders and community representatives to facilitate additional dialogues and joint service activities. The goal is to institutionalize collaboration so that peacebuilding becomes routine.

Youth Redefining Peacebuilding: Lessons from GPF Indonesia's Peace!Project

Wairimu Mwangi

August 24, 2025

ToleRun2025

What if peacebuilding could be an exciting journey of discovery, teamwork, and service? Too often, peacebuilding is seen only as high-level negotiations, political processes, or responses to conflict. While those efforts are vital, peacebuilding is also about the everyday choices and actions that foster unity, understanding, and cooperation in society. For Global Peace Foundation (GPF) Indonesia, peacebuilding begins with empowering young people to experience diversity in creative, practical, and transformative ways. This vision has come to life through the Peace!Project, a youth-led initiative rooted in Pancasila principles that empowers youth with leadership skills, values of service, integrity, resilience, and the belief that all people are part of One Family under God.

The Peace!Project challenges misconceptions by showing that peacebuilding can be dynamic, fun, and hands-on. It brings together youth from different religions, cultures, and communities to engage in activities that build respect, empathy, and teamwork. Rather than limiting peace to an abstract concept, the initiative makes it tangible, whether through planting mangroves to protect the environment, exploring interfaith traditions, or solving riddles that can only be cracked when people cooperate. Through these experiences, young Indonesians discover that peace is not passive; it is active and participatory.

This year, July was filled with meaningful activities that gave young people opportunities to grow as leaders and peace ambassadors. The journey began in Jakarta with a volunteer onboarding session, followed by a bonding session that emphasized trust-building and unity. It was a chance to strengthen the foundation of teamwork needed for future projects. As volunteer Rere Pahlevi reflected, "It gave me the chance to get closer to other volunteers, especially the new ones. Sharing laughter, stories, and activities reminded me why I love being part of this community."

In the same month, in Semarang, youth visited Kampung Pancasila, a neighborhood known for its interfaith harmony. Participants toured churches and temples, engaging directly with community leaders who shared how tolerance and cooperation are lived out daily. For Kana Indika Wibowo, the experience was inspiring: "I'm really satisfied that I finally got the chance to be part of this initiative; it was meaningful and inspiring."

At the same time, in Tangerang, another group of volunteers joined "Restoration for Peace" at Pulau Cangkir, where they planted 1,000 mangrove seedlings. This environmental action linked sustainability to peace, reminding youth that caring for the planet is also part of building a secure and prosperous future. Alvi from Yayasan ARKAN expressed, "Our country is an archipelago, and we've already lost many islands. I felt very excited and grateful to be part of this activity. It's one of the ways we can help protect the earth, especially in coastal areas."

The July programs concluded in Surabaya with a reading circle and peace talk at Ekspresi Park. Participants engaged with literature and dialogue to reflect on empathy, respect, and the role of listening in peacebuilding. Rizky, one of the attendees, shared: "I realized how important it is to really listen, observe, and try to understand others before making judgments. That's the true beginning of peace."

These July events set the stage for August's flagship Peace!Project: ToleRun 2025, held on August 23 at Taman Mini Indonesia Indah in Jakarta. Fifty youth from different faiths and regions came together for an interfaith exploration challenge, visiting houses of worship, cultural landmarks, and traditional houses, while solving creative riddles and tasks. What began as a game became a powerful lesson in tolerance and teamwork. As participant Aditya Ozap explained, "I joined because I was interested in the game concept, but it turned out to be a much deeper experience. It felt both enjoyable and eye-opening."

The highlight of ToleRun was the collective assembly of the “Nusantara Peace Message” puzzle by the lake, symbolizing unity across Indonesia’s diversity. The event concluded with fellowship and a drone show, leaving participants inspired to carry the values of tolerance and collaboration into their daily lives.

Together, the July and August Peace! Projects show how GPF Indonesia is reframing peacebuilding for the next generation; not as something abstract, but as something young people can live, practice, and celebrate. By combining interfaith leadership, family-like bonds among participants, and a culture of service, the initiative nurtures leaders who can shape Indonesia’s vision of Indonesia Emas 2045. Through these experiences, youth are learning that peace thrives in the presence of respect, cooperation, and shared responsibility. In making peace practical, fun, and transformative, GPF Indonesia is cultivating a generation of ambassadors who will carry forward the work of unity and dialogue, ensuring that peace becomes a lived reality for communities across Indonesia.

In a bold move to strengthen religious freedom and shared values across the Americas, the Global Peace Foundation (GPF) and Estamos Unidos (EU) officially signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) during a historic gathering at Casa de Dios in Guatemala City. The signing ceremony took place before an audience of over 600 leaders, marking the beginning of a transformative partnership set to influence communities throughout Latin America and the United States.

The new partnership, grounded in shared values and a mutual commitment to peacebuilding, affirms a joint mission to promote freedom of religion and belief, uphold the sanctity of family, and foster cultural cohesion through values-based leadership and community engagement.

The announcement was made during a powerful evening service at Casa de Dios, where more than 12,000 people attended. Dr. Paul Murray, International Vice President for Religious Freedom Initiatives at GPF, was introduced during the service by Pastor Cash Luna and Pastor Raúl Marroquín, both long-time strategic partners in ministry. In his remarks, Dr. Murray reflected on his six-year relationship with both pastors and expressed deep gratitude for their shared vision of building One Family under God.

During the event, Dr. Murray introduced the mission and international impact of the Global Peace Foundation and celebrated the official signing of the MOU with Rev. Cash Luna and Rev. Raúl Marroquín, who represented Estamos Unidos. Their presence underscored the spiritual significance and regional reach of the collaboration.

“This partnership is more than symbolic,” said Dr. Murray. “It is a commitment to mobilize our networks, resources, and relationships to defend religious liberty, empower families, and uplift the moral and spiritual foundation of society. Together, through Estamos Unidos and the Global Peace Foundation, we will speak to both hearts and systems, inspiring transformation from the grassroots to the halls of power.”

The MOU outlines strategic areas of collaboration, including:

- Promotion and Protection of Religious Freedom
- Strengthening the Family and Cultural Values
- Expanding Regional and National Networks
- Educational and Media Outreach

GPF will contribute global best practices, strategic leadership, and regional partnerships across the Americas, while Estamos Unidos will lead grassroots engagement through its expansive networks of churches, civic leaders, and influencers throughout Latin America and Spanish-speaking communities in the U.S.

to walk together with GPF in this unprecedented collaboration. We are united by a vision, driven by faith, and committed to equipping our communities to be the light in a time of great cultural challenge.”

The signing of this MOU represents a significant milestone for Latin America’s faith and civic sectors, signaling a new era of cooperation rooted in timeless values and the transformative power of faith in action.

As GPF and Estamos Unidos advance this groundbreaking partnership, their combined efforts strongly affirm that faith, family, and freedom are vital to a thriving society. Based on a shared commitment to human dignity and religious liberty, this collaboration aims to inspire renewed civic engagement, strengthen moral leadership, and foster transnational solidarity across the Americas. From the churches of Guatemala to communities throughout Latin America and into the United States, the initiatives launched under this MOU will serve as a beacon, reminding the world that when vision is shared and values are aligned, transformation is not only possible but inevitable.

On the sacred banks of the Ganga at Parmarth Niketan Ashram, a milestone in interfaith collaboration was marked with the launch of the National Multi-Faith Action Coordinating Committee (MFACC) on May 29, 2025. Spearheaded by the Global Interfaith WASH Alliance (GIWA) in partnership with UNICEF India, the initiative brought together senior faith leaders, development partners, and civic organizations to forge a united front for community wellbeing and sustainable development.

The committee aims to establish a structured, inclusive mechanism for faith-based action on key national priorities: Water, Sanitation, and Hygiene (WASH), health, nutrition, education, child protection, and climate resilience. Voices from across India's diverse spiritual landscape, including tribal and indigenous traditions, came together in a shared commitment to align values with action.

Representing the Global Peace Foundation (GPF) India, Chairman Dr. Markandey Rai emphasized the need to move from dialogue to development. Quoting the Upanishadic verse “Ekam sat vipra bahudha vadanti” (The truth is one, the wise call it by many names), he underscored the foundational Indian principle of unity in diversity. He added, “We are here not merely to discuss what faith can do, but to define how it will do it.”

The day’s highlights included a meaningful meeting between Dr. Rai and Hon’ble Shri Ram Nath Kovind, Former President of India. President Kovind acknowledged the MFACC initiative as a timely and necessary step in drawing upon India’s spiritual traditions to address contemporary challenges. During the event, two key publications were launched—“Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam,” reaffirming the timeless ethos of global unity, and the “Indo-Pacific Peace Forum Book,” a compilation of youth-led peacebuilding efforts across the Indo-Pacific region, curated by GPF India.

Reflecting on GPF India’s ongoing commitment to grassroots impact, Dr. Rai also highlighted initiatives that continue to bring faith-based values into direct service. The Facets of Faith platform fosters inclusive dialogue that moves beyond conversation to collective community engagement. The Period Awareness Drive (PAD) promotes sustainable menstrual health practices through workshops, youth outreach, and partnerships with community educators. The Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam Learning Centres provide out-of-school children—especially those from migrant and marginalized backgrounds—with access to quality education and support toward formal school integration. In the environmental space, GPF India engages youth through campaigns focused on tree plantation, clean-up drives, and ecological stewardship, rooted in the teachings of all faiths on the sacredness of nature.

During the MFACC deliberations, Dr. Rai proposed a set of actionable steps to operationalize and strengthen interfaith collaboration. These included mapping existing faith-based initiatives aligned with national development goals; developing joint toolkits on hygiene, education, and climate awareness; organizing interfaith service activities across communities; and ensuring the active representation of indigenous and underrepresented faith groups. These recommendations were unanimously adopted by the committee, reflecting a shared resolve to build inclusive and value-driven action frameworks.

Importantly, the gathering also coincided with May 28, which is observed globally as Menstrual Hygiene Day. Acknowledging this, Dr. Rai reminded the assembly that no meaningful development agenda can exclude women's voices and needs. He urged that all interfaith efforts must also champion women's health, dignity, and empowerment as central to community transformation.

In addition to these proposals, Dr. Rai recommended further structural enhancements to sustain the committee's momentum. These included conducting more meetings annually, establishing a Secretariat, setting up a designated office, introducing periodic reporting mechanisms, and promoting the publication of best practices from faith-led development efforts. These recommendations aim to build a sustainable, action-oriented platform that delivers real impact on the ground.

The launch concluded with a collective pledge from all participating faith leaders to work together in the service of India's communities. As the sun set over the Ganga, the participants joined the serene Ganga Aarti, a powerful symbol of spiritual unity and shared purpose.

The formation of MFACC marks a significant step forward in aligning spiritual leadership with sustainable development. With a unified vision and a commitment to coordinated action, the committee begins its journey with deep moral grounding and practical intent. GPF India remains steadfast in its resolve to collaborate with partners across sectors, translating shared values into lasting, inclusive change.

Building Religious Freedom through Partnership: GPF's Expanding Impact on Freedom of Conscience, Religion, and Belief in West Africa

Darlene Nowlin

May 20, 2025

The Global Peace Foundation (GPF) remains at the forefront of the international effort to promote and protect freedom of conscience, religion and belief (FoCRB) as a fundamental human right. Through dynamic partnerships, strategic advocacy, and inclusive convenings, GPF has contributed to the development of a growing movement aimed at securing conscience rights for everyone, regardless of faith tradition, background, or geography.

This commitment was on full display from May 5 to

7, 2025, in Accra, Ghana, where Dr. Paul Murray, GPF's International Vice President for Freedom of Conscience, Religion, and Belief, returned as a speaker and facilitator at the IRF Roundtable. Hosted in collaboration with The Sanneh Institute (TSI) and the IRF Secretariat, the gathering drew participants from various religious, civic, and professional sectors to address emerging threats to religious freedom and develop practical, cooperative solutions.

This year's convening marked more than just a discussion; it served as a launchpad for regional action. Through GPF's close collaborative partnership with the IRF Secretariat, of which Dr. Paul Murray is a founding board member and serves as Vice Chairman and Chair of its Global Council, and in coordination with The Sanneh Institute (TSI), the West Africa Regional IRF Secretariat was formally established to advance coordinated efforts across the subcontinent. The newly formed Secretariat will support national roundtables, promote multi-faith collaboration, align regional priorities with global IRF initiatives, and serve as a hub of innovation and support for West Africa's vibrant civil society.

“Real impact happens when diverse NGOs unite with a shared purpose to tackle the challenges we all face. Collaboration over competition is the key,” said Dr. Murray during the Accra Roundtable. “When we invest in human capital, through education, religious understanding, and civic engagement, we build resilient societies and thriving economies.”

GPF's work in Ghana reflects its broader global strategy: foster local leadership, promote principled engagement, and co-lead where possible to build sustainable structures that defend and expand FoCRB. The collaboration with institutions like TSI and emerging networks such as Lyn Community is evidence of a maturing ecosystem of organizations committed to FoRB across education, business, religious institutions, and policy sectors.

Participants at the Accra Roundtable represented a remarkable cross-section of Ghanaian society, including educators, imams, pastors, business leaders, governmental leaders, traditional authorities, and youth advocates. The sessions addressed complex questions, from the encroachment of one religious tradition upon another in public schools to the challenge of upholding FoCRB in a pluralistic society with minimal regulation. Yet a consensus emerged: civil society must lead, and inclusive, principled dialogue is the path forward.

Professor John Azumah, Executive Director of The Sanneh Institute, reminded the gathering:

“Religious freedom means acknowledging others, not making them invisible. It’s about sensitivity, sharing stories, and speaking up for one another.”

As GPF continues to deepen its presence across West Africa and globally, its impact in the FoCRB space is rooted in a distinctive approach, building partnerships grounded in universal principles and shared values that transcend cultural, political, and religious boundaries. Rather than merely offering a seat at the table, GPF fosters a space where all stakeholders are owners in the pursuit of peace. This inclusive model unites diverse communities around a common cause, empowering them to speak and act with one voice in defending the dignity of conscience, religion, and belief and building a future where all can live in mutual respect and shared prosperity.

Building Religious Freedom through Partnership: GPF's Expanding Impact on Freedom of Conscience, Religion, and Belief in West Africa

Darlene Nowlin

May 20, 2025

The Global Peace Foundation (GPF) remains at the forefront of the international effort to promote and protect freedom of conscience, religion and belief (FoCRB) as a fundamental human right. Through dynamic partnerships, strategic advocacy, and inclusive convenings, GPF has contributed to the development of a growing movement aimed at securing conscience rights for everyone, regardless of faith tradition, background, or geography.

This commitment was on full display from May 5 to

7, 2025, in Accra, Ghana, where Dr. Paul Murray, GPF's International Vice President for Freedom of Conscience, Religion, and Belief, returned as a speaker and facilitator at the IRF Roundtable. Hosted in collaboration with The Sanneh Institute (TSI) and the IRF Secretariat, the gathering drew participants from various religious, civic, and professional sectors to address emerging threats to religious freedom and develop

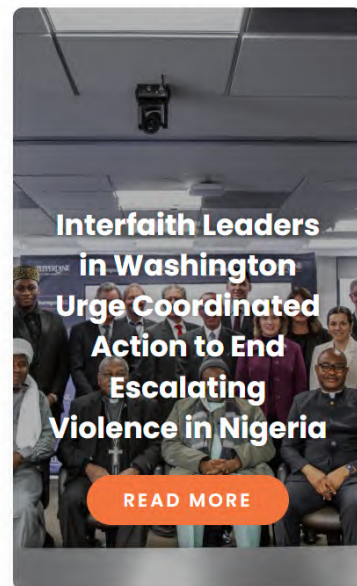

Dr. Paul Murray at the International Religious Freedom roundtable in Ghana.
