YOUNG PEOPLE. STRONGER
COMMUNITIES. A MORE PEACEFUL WORLD.

Sadie is a sophomore at the University of Maryland studying business and economics. She recently spent time in Paraguay interning with Chaco Vivo, where she had the opportunity to learn more about sustainability, community engagement, and the relationship between environmental responsibility and business.

During this call, Sadie will share some of what she learned through that experience and reflect on how young people can think about leadership, sustainability, and service in a practical way.

During this session, we will explore:

- Lessons from her experience in Paraguay
- The connection between business and sustainability
- Carbon finance and environmental responsibility
- The role young people can play in strengthening their communities
- How international experiences can shape leadership and service
