Social media has become an integral, and often inescapable, part of our lives and yet it also has its perils. Just last month, the United States Surgeon General issued a rare public health advisory on the risks that social media may pose to young people's mental health and well-being.

What are these risks and how can we protect our families from their effects? Our Just IMAP webinar aims to shed light on this question. We will be joined by three experts in the field: Lynn Walsh, Executive Committee of the NGO Committee on the Family at the United Nations; Madeleine McElligott, communications and social media specialist at National Center on Sexual Exploitation (NCOSE) in Washington, DC; and Jason Frost, co-founder of wiredhuman.org, an organization created to prevent online harm and exploitation of children.

Don't miss this opportunity to join the conversation, ask questions, and learn from professionals who work to strengthen American families and youth. Please join us on Tuesday, June 27th at 2:00 pm EDT to explore the issues with our panelists.

Sponsored by the International Media Association for Peace of Universal Peace Federation
